DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
Goshen is a simple frame farmhouse, built in the mid-18th century and subsequently altered and expanded. Stucco has been applied over the wood siding and many of the original windows have been replaced. The interior, however, retains many unusual features. The main section of the house has a three bay, east facade with the entrance in the center bay. It has two stories, an A-roof, and exterior, end chimneys. The one story screened porch across the east side (front) of the house has recently been rebuilt. The interior plan of this section consists of one room on either side of a central passage which contains the stair. The second floor plan is identical with the exception of a small room or closet at the head of the steps, over the entrance. The attic is reached via an enclosed winding stair in the south west corner of the south bedroom. The scale of this section of the house is relatively small; the ceilings are low, the doorways only about 6 feet high. The partition between the hall and the rooms on either side is formed of variable (8 inches to 11 inches) widths of vertical board panelling. The boards have tongue and groove, beaded, joints. The floor, walls, and on the The east and west walls of the north room and the room above it. The stair, narrow and steep, turns on winders rather than a landing. It has a plain rail and balusters. The original flooring has been covered on the first floor, but it is still used on the second floor. The chimneys serve a fireplace on each floor; those on the second floor being much smaller than those on the first. A two story ell has been added to the back of the main section at the south end. It contains the kitchen, with a room above, and an attic. These three rooms can be reached from the main section of the house but they are also connected to each other by narrow, winding, enclosed stairs. One theory pertaining to this section of the house is that it was moved from another location and reassembled. Another two story section has been added recently to the west side of the kitchen. This section contains one room on each level. The bathrooms are in a third addition, between the ell and the main house on the west side. There are several barns and out-buildings near the house: a stable, dating probably from the late 19th century, and a meat-house, a dairy and a small servant's quarter dating from about the same time. The property consisted of 179 acres in 1853 and has now dwindled to 15 acres.

The same paneling is found in the second floor hall, and on
